Aaron anticipates his studies in commerce will help him appreciate the corporate environment in which Davies operates and the needs and nature of clients.

He looks forward to exploring his broad interests – investigations and white collar defence, enforcement of international arbitration awards, corporate governance, public law litigation, mergers and acquisitions, among others.

Whom do you most admire?

Bryan Stevenson. Outside my professional aspirations, I care deeply about criminal justice reform, and Bryan Stevenson has dedicated his life to this mission.

Is there an organization that means a lot to you?

The Legal Information Clinic at McGill gave me the opportunity to help people dealing with various legal issues in their personal lives. I volunteered there as a caseworker for three semesters.

What skill would you like to learn and why?

I would like to learn how to speak Arabic. Since I already speak English, French and Mandarin, it's one of the remaining major languages in which I have no speaking or comprehension ability.
